

20 Sep 2016 | News

Podcast: Mark McClellan Explains New NEST Recommendations

by Ferdous Al-Faruque

In this interview, Mark McClellan, the Duke-Margolis Center director and health-policy expert, discusses new planning-board proposals for the National Evaluation System for health Technology, which US FDA envisions as a paradigm shift for device data collection.

Mark McClellan is the director of the Duke-Margolis Center, which is overseeing the public-private planning board that issued a new report outlining steps to launch a National Evaluation System for health Technology (NEST). (Also see "Next Steps For NEST: Planning Board Lays Out Launch Strategy For Evaluation System" - Medtech Insight, 20 Sep, 2016.).

In this interview, McClellan, who is also a former administrator of the US Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services and a former commissioner of the FDA, discusses the rationales behind the NEST program and some of the details of the planning board's recommendations.

Listen to the conversation with McClellan via the podcast player below:

Click here to explore this interactive content online ✨

From the editors of The Gray Sheet

Mark McClellan