Stacy Cline Amin will join US FDA as chief counsel on Sept. 17. Amin comes from the White House, where she served as special assistant and senior associate counsel to President Trump. See what Kellyanne Conway, senior counselor to the president, said about Amin here.

"Stacy is an instrumental part of the Trump administration's whole of government work to combat drug demand and the opioid crisis, including during the launch of the campaign to stop youth opioid abuse. [US FDA] is fortunate to have a brilliant lawyer and faithful public servant as the administration continues to implement important policies that will lower prescription drug prices, fast-track opioid alternatives for pain management and reduce the use of e-cigarettes among America's youth." –Kellyanne Conway, senior counselor to President Donald Trump
