UCLA Medical Center's Frank Petrigliano says the market for shoulder replacement surgery in the US is expanding – and that market includes younger people. Check out his comments here.

"There's an increased awareness of the availability of shoulder replacement in all age groups. There's an increased awareness on the consumer side and on the surgical side, and there's more people being trained to do shoulder replacement now than ever in the past." –Frank Petrigliano, associate professor of orthopedic surgery, UCLA Medical Center David Geffen School of Medicine
