A panel of experts, including Mayo Clinic Laboratories president William Morice, recently discussed how the pandemic will lead to a reimagining of and expanded access to diagnostics.

“The vaccines are great, but they're not an immediate panacea to this. There’s just a much greater need for access to diagnostic testing to really inform decisions of people in health care systems and patients, and even now with the pandemic outside of health care systems as we try and use testing to restore normal life to the greatest extent possible.” – William Morice, president, Mayo Clinic Laboratories
